Exacerbation of atopic dermatitis following burn injuries in elderly patients: a cross-sectional study. The object of the present study was to determine the incidence, the predisposing factors, and the clinical features of exacerbation of atopic dermatitis following burn injuries in elderly Japanese subjects. A cross-sectional retrospective cohort study was carried out. The sample group consisted of 98 elderly patients (age range, 71-87 years) who had been admitted to our hospital for burns injuries from 1984 to 1989. Exacerbation of atopic dermatitis was evaluated by the Skin Index Grading System (SIGS) before and 3-6 months after the burn injuries. Other data were also collected by reviewing the medical records. The relative risk for exacerbation of atopic dermatitis was statistically higher in patients who had the history of atopic dermatitis (p < 0.05).
